If this course were adopted, it should be recognized that a) the Castro regime would be enabled to consolidate its position at its own pace, b) Cuba would remain a base of subversive activities in the Hemisphere which we could probably not control effectively; c) the morale of anti-Castro Cubans both in and out of Cuba would be weakened; d) Cuba might acquire offensive weapons from the Bloc which might necessitate costly redeployment of U.S. forces (acquisition of such weapons could occur irrespective of U.S. courses of action as long as the Castro regime remained); and e) achievement of the overthrow of the Castro regime would probably be less likely.
